The Program

Students completing this program will have demonstrated the ability to:

- think critically about crime, justice, as well as the process and significance of criminalization (the social process by which we construct what counts as crime, who commits it and who is implicated in it).
- appreciate diverse conceptions of justice.
- critically analyze the relationship between systems of oppression (white supremacy, economic inequality, gendered relations of ruling, heteronormativity, etc) and crime, violence and the criminal justice system.
- apply an intersectional framework to criminological problems.
- devise sophisticated solutions to problems of crime, addiction, violence and justice.
- formulate appropriate research designs and analytic techniques to answer questions of significance to critical criminology.
- effectively communicate through oral and written methods.

Criminology & Justice Studies (CJS) students find an active and supportive department culture with a curriculum intentionally focused on a critical criminology perspective. Critical criminology challenges traditional understandings and seeks to unearth the social and historical processes that constitute 'crime'. Coursework addresses law, policy, social justice and how systems of oppression are produced and reproduced by the criminal punishment system. Faculty members teaching in this major come from multiple disciplines including sociology, ethnic studies, political science, gender & sexuality studies, social work, and Native American studies. Criminology & Justice Studies is primarily taught through a sociological perspective, which allows students to develop critical thinking, theoretical application and research skills.

The program prepares students to be transformative leaders in a variety of locations, from probation and legal advocacy to community activism and policy research. Above all students will have a solid foundation to work and effect social change. Students should know that law enforcement agencies usually have extensive training programs on the specifics of work in their organization (investigation procedures, safety protocols). HSU's Criminology & Justice Studies program provides a liberal arts degree with breadth, adaptability and practical application. Graduates choose to work in many different sectors: non-profit, private business, social services, education, health services, public relations, government, as well as pursuing graduate studies.

Community engagement and social action are important values of the Department of Sociology. Internships are encouraged for the capstone experience. The Sociology/CJS community advisory board assists with developing and maintaining internships and community action research opportunities.

Preparation

In high school take math, writing, and social science courses (history, psychology, sociology).

Many contributing departments to the CJS major offer 1-2 unit workshops around pressing social issues and popular topics. We encourage enrollment in these workshops, but the units may not be counted as part of the required 40-45 unit major requirement. Exception: Units may be used to "make up" 1-2 units if a student is short after transferring 3-unit courses from another college.
